now is known to be a dangerous drug that is affecting individuals, families and local communities; it has
"at the very least, this is a safety issue that should have been explored before this drug was released over the counter instead of treating our young girls as experimental guinea pigs."

it's awesome to come across a blog every once in a while that isn't the same old rehashed information